Crash Data Retrieval System

Following a collision event, it is possible to recover data from a vehicle's Airbag Control Module (ACM) or Powertrain Control Module (PCM). This document offers a summary of covered vehicles and available data. For information regarding a specific vehicle that may or may not be on the attached list, or to arrange for download and interpretation, please feel free to contact one of our specially trained and certified technicians.

- Available Data:

1994 – 1999 General Motors Vehicles:

ACMs installed in GM vehicles manufactured during these production years will provide post-collision data such as longitudinal speed change and seatbelt use information. Note: Some 1999 models may also have pre-crash data (see next heading).

2000 - Present General Motors Vehicles:

ACMs utilized since 2000 will record pre-crash data in addition to the information provided by those from earlier model years. This data may include vehicle speed, throttle position, engine RPMs, and brake use for up to 10 seconds preceding airbag deployment. In addition, new vehicles using the CAN Bus system may also offer such parameters as steering angle, outside temperature, and roll-over information.

2001 - Present Ford, Lincoln, and Mercury Vehicle ACM Data:

Ford Motor Company ACM data may include post-collision information such as lateral and longitudinal speed changes, driver and passenger seatbelt use indication, and driver seat position location.

2003 – Present Ford, Lincoln, and Mercury PCM Data:

PCM information includes up to 25 seconds (six minutes in some models) of pre-collision data such as speed, brake position, engine speed, and throttle position.

2004 – Present Chrysler Vehicles:

Chrysler ACM data includes up to two seconds of pre-crash information such as speed, brake position, engine speed, and throttle position.

- Evidence Preservation:

If it is suspected that a vehicle involved in an incident contains electronic collision data, it is strongly recommended that the battery be disconnected and steps be taken to ensure that power not be given to the vehicle prior to download.
